Presentation on Public Health Capstone Climate Change Workbook and Request for Follow Up Feedback - Jeni Walker Bailey

Jeni Walker Bailey is a La Crosse resident and a master of public health student in her last semester at the University of South Dakota. She is seeking input from the CAPSC on her capstone project. Bailey is seeking input from those that might benefit from or engage with her project. Her plan is to develop a workbook with climate-related activities and education that will help build personal and family resiliency for the challenges that may come with climate change. Bailey intends to make it fun and written at a middle-school reading level. She would like to make the book set up for an individual to work on easily in their own neighborhood or in local parks, but make the activities adaptable so that a family or friend group could work through it together as well. Bailey is excited to share her project with the committee, and hopes you have some time to look over her products, including the proposal and a few drafts and outlines over the next few months.
